

6516205047.txt

XM radio supplies a service to the general public. To in anyway limit their right to broadcast news, weather or traffic conditions would be to do a disservice to the general public. In that the xm radio is a subscriber service, the subscribers are paying for the service. The service should be free to provide the best and most complete array of services possible.

XM does not require constant channel change to access ?local? stations that meet the need or taste of the consumer. In a mobile mode (travel) XM delivers a non fade stream of entertainment and information. If anything, it is safer than local stations. It is not necessary to divide driving attention with the radio receiver while channel surfing or tuning for informatio or entertainment.

Thank You,
Robert Sieveking